HE. Analy

LIFE

Edward Seymour, Duke of Somerset, Lord General, and Lord Protector,

OF THE

REALM,

In the REIGNS of HENRY VIII and EDWARD VI. With some Parallel Instances to the CASE of

JOHN Duke of March

Late Great Favourite of ENG LAND.

To which is added,

The sudden FALL of that Predominant Statesman JOHN DUDLET, Duke of Porthumberland. Wherein is contain'd the Opinion of the Judges at that Time, in the Point of Altering the Succession, as then Settled by All of Parliament.

LONDON:

Printed for J. Baker, at the Black-Boy in Peters Noster-Row. 1713. (Price 6 d.

I Miscof Someriet, and Gwiere, and Lord' I roleston, THE TOTAL TO LIST. and control of the first of the same of the Silver A Market Comment of the Comme PROPERTY OF THE PARTY OF THE PA "特殊的文品等"中国,从中国的文化的文化的文化。

1

that Time changle any Presidents to the Founds instruction that of his Lands taken from which ex we'd from the Ring's Person. Which

ed es mid everent ent le be

ONTENTS. ice; the King and Enmity between Great Men the Occasion of many Inconveniencies in Government, and very often the Ruin of one another.

A Discarded Favourite in the utmost Danger, where the Royal Ear is open to all the Complaints of his Adversaries.

Some Remarkable Instances of it in the Life of Edward, Duke of Somerset, and a Parallel not much different from the Case of a late Great Favourite of this Age.

Overthrown by the Artifices of his auou d Adverfary the Earl of Charmith, (afterwards Duke of Pouthumberland,) to make Way for bis own Ambitious Defigns.

Neither his Merit, nor his great Services, Sufficient to secure bim against the Malicious Accufations form'd against bim.

Empty Stories Trumpt up against bim to leffen bis Reputation, and alienate the Peoples Hearts from bim.

The Lord Chancellor's Speech, Setting forth the Reafons of Matwith and the rest of the Lords combining against him.

A Remarkable Speech of a Worthy Citizen in an Assembly of the Common-Council, with the Resolution that pass'd thereon; wherein it appears, that dutifully applying to the Sovereign was not at

The Contents.

that Time thought any Diminution to the Honour or Dignity of the Crown.

His first Accusation amounts to no more than a Fine, having part of his Lands taken from him, and being remov'd from the King's Person. Which Point gain'd, his Adversaries procure him to be accus'd a Second Time of Treason, &c. and importune the King against his own earnest Desire to take him off.

He afferts bis Innocence; the King and People grieve for him.

Many of his Friends involved in his Ruin, to give the greater Colour of Guilt against him.

Posthumberland grows Absolute at Court, begins to be bated by the Nobility and People, and by many of his own Party.

Wholly Engrosses the King's Ear, and perswades him to alter the Succession.

The Judges Opinion thereon.

He endeavours to draw the Lawful Successor into his Power, but is prevented in his Design.

Opposes ber Title, and causes the Lady Jane Grey to be Proclaim'd.

12.133

Is Pufilanimously Taken, Condemn'd and Executed.

Dies unpitied, even by many who had been his Creatures.

20 MA 59

ERRATA.

PAge 3. Line 26. for that late Great Favourite, read a late Great Favourite; p. 6. near the Bottom, for shining Character, r. shining st Character.

Allembly of the Common-Council, well the Re-

ns ch be n- to

ve

210

2-nd

les

ney

d.

te,

he

E

THE

LIFE

OF

Edward Seymour,

Duke of Somerset, &c.

F we look into History we shall find, that the frequent Enmity between Great Men has not only produc'd many ill Confequences in Government, but likewise too often ended in the Ruin of one another. Examples of this Kind are fo many, that 'twill be difficult to fay in what Reign they have not happen'd; and tho' the Inconveniences of these Intestine Bickerings have, no doubt, sometimes reach'd the Throne, it will feem a little strange to say, that we meet with few or no Inflances that the Soveraign has been ever very Solicitous to reconcile them, tho' the Authority cannot be question'd to have been sufficient; which points to an Old Maxim, Ambition, as well as Love, will admit of no Rival.

In this Case a discarded Favourite seems to stand on the highest Precipice of Danger; for if those, who to an Emergency have enjoy'd the Sovereign Protection, and only with the utmost Reluctancy been abandon'd to the Complaints of their Adversaries, could not be able, almost in any Age, to make their Ground good, to what an Extremity of Fate are they expos'd, where the Royal Ear is always open to every Impression that shall be made against them, and ready to order the most vigorous Prosecution that the infatiate Malice of their Enemies can devise? And 'tis from hence certain, That the Ambitious Man is never truly fatisfied while his Rival remains in a Capacity of returning, like a Tide, to those Floods of Power and Favour he once enjoy'd, to which many unexpected and sudden Accidents may contribute. Tis therefore the Busmess of his Safety, as well as of his Hatred, to make Sure Work, and we shall not often find that he has fail'd by one Means or other.

In the Life of this Great Man will be found fome very Remarkable Instances of what is laid down, and in a Parallel not much different (so far as the Extent of Time has yet carried Things) to the Case of that late Great Favourite of this Age. But as I am not to pervert History, the Reader is himself to make the Inferences, which, in a Subject so much in Request, will rather prove a kind of agreeable Amusement, than any real Defect in

Story.

As to their Birth and Extraction there is little Inequality between them, being both well Descended from Antient and Worthy Ancestors, and of Equestrian Dignity; and if it were any Addition to the Comparison, both seated feated in the fame County too. But I shall not descend to such Nice Particulars, their Rise and Actions having a very near Parallel, as will be seen in the History of this Edward, Duke of Somer et.

to

or

he

n-

e,

d,

d, ry

nd

i-

es

at

d

1-

d

7-

c. 11

re

ne

d id

0 d

1-

rt

e

n

-

n

11

it

h

He was the Son of Sir John Seymour, of Wolf-Hall, in the County of Wilts, one of the Winftan Knights of the Body to King Henry the Eighth, Churchill and a Person very well esteemed by the King. of Woounder which Advantages he had the Honour of ton-Bafbringing his Children to Court. For this Ed- County of ward, who was the eldeft of his Three Sons, Wilts, was he obtain'd the Honour of Knighthood, having Father to ferv'd as * Page of Honour, and afterwards as the Duke of one of the Esquires for the Body, to the King: M_h. Thomas, the Second, was first one of the Gen- * 25 tlemen of the King's Privy-Chamber, and came at last to be Lord * High-Admiral, with other * great Preferments. Henry, the youngest, had a * principal Command in the Army; and his Daughter, Jane Seymour, he preferred to be one of the Maids of Honour to Queen Anne Bullen, to whose Advancement to the * Royal * Bed, the vast Honours and Preferments heap'd on this great Duke, and his Family, did afterwards accrue: For the King, in his Amorous Amusements, preferring new Beauties to the weak Engagements of Conjugal Love, cast his Affections on this young Lady, while an Attendant on his Queen, for whose Death this new Passion of his soon open'd a wide Door, and for which no other Inftances need to be given, than that he mourn'd it in the Robes of Matrimony, Marrying her the very next Day after Queen Anne Bullen was Beheaded: And indeed the was the most ador'd of all his Wives; but herein he found a Judgment for his remarkable Incontinence, for the liv'd with him little more than a Year, and then died in Childbed, to the inexpressible Grief of the King, who not only absented from his Palace, but wore close Mourning, even in the Festival Time of Christ-

ket, in the

mass.

But to return to Sir Edward Seymour, her Brother; upon the King's casting his Affection on her he wanted for no Titles of Honour, or other Preferments, which for her * Sake the King cou'd well bestow: He had first the Title of a Viscount conferred on him, and the Honour of Knighthood to his Brother Thomas, being soon after Captain of the Isle of Tersey.

Nor did the Tide of Honour stop here, for the King, upon the Death of Sir John Seymour, his Father, created him Earl of Hertford, and, out of an unusual Point of Bounty and Kindness, gave him a Grant of his Creation-Money, not out of the Profits of the County, as was then usual, but out of his own immediate Revenues.

And now the King began to make Use of him in Martial Affairs.

He was first sent over to dispute the Limits of the English against the French, who were then raising Forces; and on his Return to England was made Lord Great Chamberlain for Life: Soon after which he was join'd with the Duke of Norfolk in the Command of those Forces sent into Scotland in the 34th of Henry VIII. and the next Year made Lieutenant-General of the North; and now his dawning Glory began to be very Conspicuous by his Successes against the Enemy.

The King therefore being at the Siege of Bologne, where they found a very warm Defence, sent for him thither, whom he joined with

Wil

he

140

Bo: Fro

ne

M.

gre

Fr

ce

Sic

hi

G

pl

L

0

fc

ft

fo

h

with a Body of fresh Troops, and soon reduced he Place, and afterwards routed an Army of 14000 French, who lay encamped hard by.

The Scots making leveral Incursions upon the Borders in Conjunction with 5000 Auxiliaries from France, he was fent against them, where he destroyed all the Towns upon the Middle Marches, and passing toward the West, made great Spoil in those Parts: Soon after, the French endeavouring to regain Bologne, he forced their Retreat, and purfuing the Enemy, befides the Slaughter, gain'd feveral Trophies of his Success. The next Year the Earl of Surrey. Governour of Bologne, being laid afide, he was put in his stead, and was sent over with the Lord Admiral, and an Army of 9300 Men, to oppose the French, then making Head; and foon after, upon Proposals of Peace, was conflituted the Chief of the English Commissioners for that Treaty.

0

ot

le t-

r

n

r

e - e -

r

And now the King lying on his Death-bed, he was appointed one of his Executors, and of the Council to his Son, Prince Edward; who being Proclaimed, he was by the Unanimous Consent of the Council chosen Protector to the King, and constituted Lord Treasurer of England, and advanced to the Dignity of Duke of Somerset, and created Earl-Marshal of England for Life, and a little Time after received his Patent of Protector and Governour of the King and Realm; and the same Year had a Special Grant that he should sit alone, and be placed at all Times, as well in the King's Presence in Parliament, as in his Absence, on the Middle of the Bench or Stool standing next on the Right Hand the King's Seat-Royal in Parliament. Soon after he was fent at the Head of a strong Army into Scotland, where he fought Muffelborough Battle, where he gave the Scots a Signal Overthrow. An Ancient Historian recites the following Character of him.

Being much in Favour with King Henry VIII. and by him much employed, he was always observed to be Faithful and Fortunate, as well in giving Advice as in managing a Charge. The Invasion of James V. of Scotland was frustrated, and Solem-Mosse-Battle won by his Direction. The next Year He and the Earl of Warwick Burnt Leith and Edinburgh, and wasted Tivedale and the The following Year being fent to view the Fortifications of the Marches of Calais, with the hardy Approach of 7000 English, he beat up an Army of 21000 French, took their Baggage and Cannon, and all with the Loss of One Man, and afterwards won the Castle commonly called Red-Pile. The next Year he invaded and spoiled Picardy, and began the Forts of New-haven, Blacknels, and Bullinberge. Upon these and other like Successes bis succeeding Fortunes were always effecmed rather New than Strange; and his only Prefence was reputed Sufficient Surery for an * Army. Yet did be never rise hereby, either in Haughtiness in himself, or in Contempt of others, but remain'd Courteous and Affable, chusing a Course least subject to Envy, by avoiding Popular Applause, nor ever aspiring higher than to be the Second Perfon in the State.

This is a Summary Account of his Actions and Character; and 'tis reasonable to think such excellent Principles might have secur'd a Man from the most malicious Machinations form'd against him, but when there is a Door open to *Insinuations, the most illustrious Actions may be perverted, and the shining Character debased and clouded. It was under such Constructions that his avowed Adversary, the Earl of Warwick, who had long projected his

Fall,

Fal

for

W

Ad

Br

fto

W

hi

T

E

f

t

* 5

Scots

rian

III.

erv-

ving

n of

em-

next

eith

the

iew

ith

an

ind

nd

d-

i-

k-

ke

1

ce

d

5

Fall, prevail'd in his Design: There had been a former Grudge between 'em, on the Account of Marmick's losing the * Post of Lord High- * Admiral, which the Duke had procur'd to his Brother, the Lord Sudley; but chiefly that he stood in the Way of his Ambitious Designs, which was to have the chief Sway at Court himself.

He therefore lay upon the Watch for every Opportunity to accomplish his Ends, toward which a very strange and unhappy Accident in Time made Way. Having infinuated himfelf into the Lord Sudley's Family, he first rais'd Discontents between him and his Brother, the Protector; and at the same Time under a disfembled Friendship to the other, found Means to foment and aggravate the Differences, without being feen in it in the leaft. This Thomas, Lord Sudley, had Married Catherine Parr, Relict of King Henry VIII. a Woman adorn'd with many Excellent Qualifications of Mind and Body, against whom the Dutchess of Somerses had conceiv'd an irreconcilable Quarrel, upon very flight Grounds, chiefly because she had Precedency of her, who was otherwise the Wife of the greatest Peer in the Kingdom, and from whom none had before taken Place: Befides, the the more refented being dispossest by the Wife of a younger Brother. 'Tis certain,' fay our Historians, she was a Woman of a haughty Temper, and had not that regard to Her Soveraign which she ought to have had; and therefore to obtain her Revenge. . she posses'd her Husband that the Lord Sudley fought nothing more than to difpossess him of the King's Favour, and to advance himself in his Place. Warwick had his Finger in this Bufiness all the while, and drew in 访 Opportunity; and the Duke withal something listening to his Wife's Interpositions, an open Enmity ensu'd between the Two Brothers.

The Duke, who was of a free and open Temper, did not perceive the Trap that War: mick had laid for him; and indeed, if we may Credit History, his Brother's Actions gave him Cause sufficient for Distrust, who being a Man naturally Fierce and Ambitious, and conceiving himself of the Two the titter for Publick Government, he began to look on his Brother with Contempt: What might farther serve to raise his Enmity against him was, that having a vain Delign to Marry the Princels Elizabeth, tho' at that Time scarce Marriageable, the Protector had wifely prevented it, confidering it as a very rash and dangerous Project. From this Time they acted no more like Brothers, for the Lord Sudley having fortified himself with Money and Friends, began to viline and traduce the Protector, and to endeavour to corrupt the King's Servants with large Promifes, and by degrees to draw in some of the Nobility to him, of which Number Warwish craftily pretended to be, but his View was only the Ruin of them both.

In the Interim, the Queen Dowager, his Wife, dying in Child bed, not without Suspicion of Poiton, he now more importunately sought the Princess Elizabeth than ever, endeavouring to procure her even by a Clandestine Marriage, and not till after the Nuprials to have acquainted the King or Council with it: But this Design being seasonably discovered, and a Parliament assembled, he was, by the Authority thereof, committed to the Taper, and without any Trial Condemn'd; and foon after, upon the Dissolution of the Parliament, Publickly Beheaded, having first solumnly protested, That he had never any sinister Intentions against the King or Kingdom: And indeed, confidering the Hand that Marwick had in all this Matter, and in fomenting the Charge against him, it may very well be taken for Truth.

This Thomas Lord Sudley was a Person of Admirable Courage, Magnificent Air, and Comely Person, but of a more Fierce and Untractable Temper than the Protector his Brother: They were otherwise both so well affected to the King, that one might well be term'd his Sword, and the other his Buckler. The Duke was greatest in Favour with the People. and the other with the Nobility; both highly effeem'd by the King, both Fortunate slike in their Undertakings, and both Ruin'd alike by their own Inadvertency, in opening a Way to the Malicious Deligns of their Enemies, which were chiefly to fet them at Variance with each other, which had such Effect, that the Knot, not only of Love, but of Nature, feetn'd to be diffolv'd: Whilst they held together in Amity, they were like Two Arms, the one defending theother, and both of them the King; but many Things concurr'd to diffolve this Union. especially their Dispositions, which were much unlike; living in Precarious Friendship, like Brothers, glu'd together, not cemented : hawing befides incurred the Envy of many of the Nobility, by the Great Honours and Preferments they enjoyed, and who were only to be ruin'd by being separated. Thele

ċ

Thus far Collarwick had carried his Point, and he had now a hopeful Foundation to blacken and defame the Protector, and render him odious to the Nation; for having fign'd the Warrant for his Brother's Execution, (as indeed nobody else could fign it,) this was maliciously thrown among the People, and that he had been the chief Instrument of taking away his Life: From hence arose a very great Hatred against him; many of the Nobility, and others, calling him a Bloodsucker, and a Murderer; and saying, it was not fit the King should be trusted under the Protection of such a Monster.

Other Clamours were more purposely rais'd against him, particularly, that he had caus'd a Church, near Strand-Bridge, and Two Bishops Houses, to be pull'd down to make a Seat for his New Building, call'd Smerfet House, in digging the Foundation whereof the Bones of many who had been buried there were dug up, and carried into the Fields: And because the Stones of that Church, and those faid Houses, were not sufficient for that Work, the Steeple, and most Part of the Church of St, John of Ferusalem, were ruin'd and overthrown with Gunpowder, and the Stones carried to contribute toward that Building: Likewise the Cloysters on the North Side of St. Paul's Cathedral, and the Charnal-House on the South Side thereof, with the Chapel, the Tombs, and Monuments therein, being all beaten down, and the Bones carried into Finsbury-Fields, and that for the same Purpose he intended to have pull'd down St. Mangaret's Church at Westminster. dog feparatid. 5 mor

m

m

ot

an

ha

fro

th

be

M

per

to

ret

W

fio

and

Wa

felv

lor

firf

We

4

CE LY

a Daminger as to other Lords and Ladies of the

These Things took Fire among the Common Reople, whereupon Warwick espying his Opporcomity, drew to him no less than Eighteen of the Privy Council to join with him in overthrowing the Protector, alarming the Nation in general against him: With this Party he withdrew from Court, who enter'd into fecret Consultations, frequenting the City with a nume rous Train of Servants in Rich Liveries, and other Demonstrations of Disorder; which so startled the Protector, that he sent his Secretaty to them in the King's Name to demand the Caufes of their affembling in that Manner; and to fignifie, that he would thank them for hating him, in Case they did it in love to the King, for whole Sake he defired them to defift from needless Hostility, and meet like Friends, that the Occasions of these Animosities might be remov'd. In the mean Time he arm'd 500 Men, Part the King's, and Part his own, ramperd the Court Gares, and caufing more Men. to be levied, both by Letters and Proclamation. removing the King from Hampton-Court to Windfor. Death of his protect, whole

d

d

a

55

r

n

of

p,

5,

e,

of

th

i-

y-

e-

uhe

or

rd

fe

Whereupon the Lords at London took Possession of the Tower, sent for the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City to Ely-House, where Warwick lodg'd, and there presenting themselves secretly arm'd, caus'd the Lord Chancellor Rich to make a Speech to them; wherein, first exposing the Protector's Impersections, he went on: "That tho' he wanted many requisite good Qualities for the Office he enjoy'd, yet he was so Opiniative and Proud, that he rejected the Advice of others: That his Wife was an Imperious Woman, and had carried C 2 herself

"herself obstinately, as well to the Queen Dowager as to other Lords and Ladies of the Court, to whom she grew almost intolerable. In general, he said, that he was Guilty of Bribery and Extortion; and that he had laid his Hands on the King's Jewels and Treasure left by his Father, which were known to be of inestimable Value; and had given forth, that King Henry died so Poor, that had he liv'd a Quarter of a Year longer he had been utterly sham'd.

Likewise that he had, under Pretence of Necessity, made Sale and Exchanges of the "King's Lands, as also of the Offices and Preferments in his Disposal, without regarding either Merit, or any Thing elfe, provided he cou'd draw the Money into his own Coffers. That he had crected a Mint at Durbam Place for his own private Advantage, made Sale of Colleges, and Chantries, levied Subfidies under Colour of War, imbezzled the King's Treasure, extorted Money by Loans, yet left the King's Servants and Soldiers unpaid, and wasted vast Sums in erecting Sumptuous " Buildings. Not forgetting to throw in the " Death of his Brother, whom they alledg'd he had unnaturally brought to the Scaffold, and actually fign'd the Warrant for his Execution with his own Hand. That he likewife so wholly possess'd the King's Ear, that he kept many of his best Friends from coming to him, left they shou'd undeceive him of these Things.

the common People, by a feigned diffirmulated Gesture, having those ready to Trumoet

en

he

ra-

lty

ad

nd

ere

gi-

he

of

he

re-

ng

he rs.

ace

ale

ies

g's

eft

nd

us

he d

ld,

X-

at

n-

m ay

u-

nxet

pet and Extol his Adions, whereby the People were foolishly drawn to let too great a "Value on his former Services, which had not "been atchiev'd either by Courage or Conduct, but thro a little good Fortune ; and that others who were not fo confpicuous in their Pofts had deferved as well as he, whole Services he always took Care to blind; and preferr'd none in the Army but his own Creatures, making Sale of Inferiour Commis-" figns, and out of a covetous Humour, bartering the Honour of a General for paultry Sums of Money, which he amais'd together, whereby he engross'd greater Riches than the King himfelf, and had rais'd his Family to such a heighth, that they wholly sway'd " the King and Kingdom.

"That to make the French King his Friend," he had betray'd the King's Forts beyond. Seas, and transacted several Things of Consequence underhand, as had been very prejudicial to the Nation. Likewise that he intended to procure a Resignation of the King's Sisters, and others, who were entituled to the Crown, and entail the same upon his own Posterity. Urging the Citizens upon all these Considerations to join with the Lords in Council to remove him.

In the Afternoon of the same Day the Lord Mayor assembled a Common Council at Guild-Hall, where Two Letters arriv'd almost in one Instant, One from the King and the Lord Protector for 1000 Men to be arm'd for the Sasety of the King's Person, the other from the Lords in London for double the Number to aid them in Desence of the King's Person; both Parties pretending pet and Fried his Adions whereby the Per-

66

4

CL.

46

66

66

46

The Recorder, who was in the Interest of the Lords at London, did very fully set forth their Complaints against the Protector, so that he won a great many to favour their Party; but a Disinterested and truly Worthy Citizen, nam'd Stradlowe, stood up, and spake to the Assembly as follows,

"This Business, Right Honourable Lord Mayor, and the Residue of this Court, as it is a very high Paffage of State, foit is worthy of ferious Consideration; and that upon sudden Advice, nothing may be done or deter-" mined therein, left probably by being ferviceable to the Defigns of other Men, whose Purposes we know not, we cast ourselves into the Throat of Danger, which hitherto we do not fee. Two Things I much fear, in Case we afford prefent Aid to the Lords, either of which should cast upon us a Bridle rather to stop us a while, than for stopping or stirring too soon or too fast at their Incitement; one is the certain Dangers of the City, the other the uncertain Adventure of all the Realm.

"First then, if we join to the Lords, whether they prevail or not we might ingulph ourselves into assured Danger; an Example whereof I find in Fabian, whose Report I entreat you all to observe. In the Time of Henry III, the Lords, in a good Cause, for Maintenance of divers Beneficial Laws, desir'd Aid of the City against the King, which was granted, and the Quarrel brought to the Arbitriment of the Sword. In this Battle the King and his Son were taken ken Prisoners, and upon their Enlargement for a free Pardon was granted, not only to the Lords, but the Citizens of London, which was afterwards confirmed in Parliament. But what followed? Was the Displeasure forgotten? No verily, nor ever forgotten during that King's Life: For afterwards the Liberties of the City were taken away, Strangers appointed Governours, and the Ciff tizens perpetually vex'd in their Persons and Estates.

" Next, touching my Fear for the Common-"Wealth I much suspect these Considerati-"lons. I always expect from them fome "durking Mischief, which the more cunningly "to be kept in, the more dangeroufly it will " break forth. For albeit there may be many "Hands in this Action, yet one is the Head, "who doubtless hath Skill to play his own "Game; and tho' the Pretences given out are "always fair, and for the Publick Good, yet "are the fecret Intentions commonly ambitious, and only aim at private Ends. Yea, " many times the End is worfe than the first "Intent; because when the Subject hath ob-" tain'd the Hand against his Prince, I will not fay he will be loth, but doubtlets it is not " fafe, for him to give over his Advantage : Wherefore I am of Opinion that we "fuspend giving any Aid for the present.

Upon this Advice the Court resolv'd to arm 100 Horse and 4000 Foot for Desence of the City: To the King they return'd Answer, That they would be ready upon any Necessity to apply all their Forces either for his

ter with them in the most gentle and oblig-

Mill

ſs.

ne

ir

10

d

đ

it

Y

in

th

or

fu

th

T

1

Vit

his Honour or Defence, but intreated him to be pleased to hear such Complaints as were objected against the Protector before he affembled forces in the Field, which in those Tempessuous Times, as it could not be done without great Danger, so without very great Cause it should not be undertaken. To the Lords they answer'd, That they were ready to join them in any Dutiful Petition to the King, but to join with them in Arms they could not upon so short a Warning, and without Time more duly to consider it.

The next Day the Lords at London difpatch'd Letters to the Lords at Windfor, wherein they charg'd him with many Disorders, both in his private Actions, and manner of Government, requiring that he should disperse the Forces he had rais'd, withdraw himfelf from the King, and be contented to submit himself to Justice and Reason. Hereupon the King feating the work, diffolv'd all those additional Troops, keeping only his Guards, and the Protector dispatch'd his Secretary once more to the Lords at Lordon, to perfuade them, for the Publick Good, that all Animofities might be laid afide ; but neither did they permit the ecretary to return to him, mor fent any Mellage back.

Finding they were wonderfully exasperated against him, without any apparent Cause, but that he enjoy'd the King's Favour, he wrote Two Letters, one in his own Name to the Earl of Warnick, and the other in the Name of the Lords at Windsor, to the Lords at London, in which he expostulated the Matter with them in the most gentle and obliging ing Terms, offering to refer his Caule to any equitable Decision they wou'd Name, but this, instead of having the Effect he imagin'd, only inspir'd them with the greater Ardour and Courage to proceed in their violent Measures against him.

to

B.

Ti-

ofe

tie

at he

dy

tie

ey nd

6-

ts,

ðÉ

fe

elf

iit

he

H-

nd

re

or

ht

he

ge

ed ut

ote

he

ne

at

at-

ig-

ng

Hereupon they forthwith Published a Proclamation under the Hands of Seventeen of them, wherein they charged the Caules of all the Calamities and Losses which had lately before happened, and had cost the Lives of many Thousands of the King's Subjects; likewise the Loss of divers Pieces beyond the Sea, which had been won by the great Adventure of the late King's Person, and Consumption of his Treasure, to have been through the evil Government of this Protector; and defired, and in the King's Name prohibited, all Subjects from farther giving Obedience to any of his Soon after the Publishing whereof Precepts. they directed Three Letters to Windsor, one to the King himself, another to the Protector, and a third to the Houshold; which Letter to the Protector was gilded with many smooth Words, fair Promises, and full of Hope; but the other Two foully fetting forth his Obitinacy, Avarice, Ambition, his rash Engagements into Wars in the King's unfettled Age and Effate, his Negligences, Deceits, and all other Insufficiences beforementioned.

Wherewith Sir Robert Wingfield, Captain of the Guard, being fent to Windfor, he so well persuaded the King, both of the Loyal Affections of the Lords towards him, and of their moderate Delires against the Protector, (then present,) that he was removed from the King's Person.

fon, and a Guard fet upon him till the next Day, when the Lords at London were appointed to be there: Who came accordingly, but the Earl of Warmick not with them, tho' all moved from Which Lords coming before the King repeated their former Complaints, advising him to beware of such as were both Powerful, Ambitious, Mischievous, and Rich: Affirming, that it would be better Security to him, that this Power should be committed to many, who cannot so readily knit together in Will or in Action, as when the whole Managery refideth in one: Whereupon this Duke (being no longer called Protector) was put into their Hands, and committed to Custody in Beauchamp's Tower, within that Castle, and the next Day brought to London, where he rode through Holbourn betwixt the Earls of Southampton and Huntington, followed by Lords and Gentlemen to the Number of Three Hundred, all mounted on Horseback; and at Sopher-lane being received by the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, Recorder, and divers Knights of Note, with their Attendants, bearing Halberts, was convey'd to the Tower.

Where having breath'd a small Time, certain Lords of the Council were sent to him, who after a short Preface in such Terms as Hate and Dissimulation could temper together, remembring how great the Amity had formerly been between them, and of what continuance, then acknowledging what Offices and Services he had done for the Commonwealth, yet enterlacing some Errors and Defects wherewith they seemed to reproach him, they presented to him certain Articles, as from the rest of the Privy-Council, desiring his present Answer, whether he would would acknowledge them to be true, or fland upon his Justification.

ay,

l of om

ing

ul,

m-

m,

or

fi-

no

eir u-

xt

gh

nd

n d

e-

r,

1-1e

n

d

1

1

Which Articles were thefe.

I. THAT he took upon him the Office of Protector upon express Condition, that he should do nothing in the King's Affairs but by Assent of the late King's Executors, or the greatest Part of them.

- Justice, and subvert Laws of his own Authority, as well by Letters as by other Command.
- 3. That he cans'd divers Persons Arrested and Imprisoned for Treason, Murther, Manslaughter, and Felony, to be discharged against the Laws and Statutes of this Realm.
- 4. That he appointed Lieutenants for Armies, and other Officers, for the Weighty Affairs of the King, under his own Writing and Seal.
- 5. That be communed with Ambassadors of other Realms alone of the Weighty Matters of the Realm.
- 6. That he would taunt and reprove divers of the King's most Honourable Counsellors sor declaring their Advice in the King's Weighty Affairs against his Opinion; sometimes telling them that they were not worthy to sit in Council, and sometimes that he needed not to open Weighty Matters to them; and that if they were not agreeable to his Opinion he would discharge them.

7. That against Law he held a Court of Requests in his House, and did enforce divers to answer there for their Freehold and Goods, and did determine of the same.

8. That being no Officer, (without the Advice of the Council, or most part of them,) he did dispose of the King's Gift for Money, grant Leases and Wards, gave Bishopricks, and made Sale of the King's Lands.

9. That he commanded Alchimy and Multiplication to be practiced, thereby to debase the King's Coin.

10. That divers Times he openly said, that the Nobility and Gentry were the only Cause of Dearth, whereupon People rose to reform Matters of themselves.

11. That against the Mind of the whole Council, be caused Proclamation to be made concerning Inclosures, whereupon the People made divers Insurrections, and destroyed many of the King's Subjects.

12. That he sent forth a Commission with Articles Annexed concerning Inclosures, Common Highways, Cottages, and such like Matters; giving the Commissioners Authority to bear and determine those Causes, whereby the Laws and Statutes of the Realm were subverted, and much Rebellion raised.

13 That he suffered Rebels to affemble, and lye Armed in Camp, against the Nobility and Gentry of the Realm, without speedy repressing of them.

Rel

Fee

ago

of

lik

A

rif

per

th

th

vi

- 14. That he did comfort and encourage divers Rebels, by giving them Money, and promising them Fees, Rewards, and Services.
- 15. That he caused a Proclamation to be made against Law, and in Favour of the Rebels, that none of them should be vex'd or sued by any for their Offences in their Rebellion.
- 16. That in Time of Rebeltion he said, that he liked well the Actions of the Rebels; and that the Avarice of Gentlemen gave Occasion to the People to rise; and that it was better for them to die than to perish for Want.

5

- 17. That he said, the Lords of the Parliament were loth to reform Inclosures, and other Things, therefore the People had good Cause to reform them themselves.
- 28. That after Declaration of the Defaults of Buloine, and the Pieces there, by such as did survive them, he would never amend the same.
- 19. That he would never suffer the King's Peices of Newhaven and Blackness to be furnished with Men and Provision, albeit he was advertised of the Defaults, and advised thereto by the King's Council; whereby the French King was embaldened to attempt upon them.
- 20. That he would neither give Authority, nor Suffer Noblemen and Gentlemen, to suppress Rebels in Time convenient; but wrote to them to speak the Rebels fair, and use them gently.

21. That upon the Fifth of October, (that prefent Tear,) at Hampton-Court, for Defence of his own private Causes, be procured Seditious Bills to be written in Counterfeit Hands, and secretly to be dispersed in divers Parts of the Realm, beginning thus, Good People, intending thereby to raise the King's Subjects to Rebellion and open War.

at

le

an

W

bi

de

WQ

H

W

ce

E

te

N

R

ha

hi

hi

m fo

th

te

H

Br

th

L

22. That the King's Privy-Council did consult at London to come to him, and move him to reform bis Government; but he hearing thereof, declared by his Letters in divers Places that they were High Traytors to the King.

23. That he declared untruly, as well to the King, as to other Young Lords attending his Person, that the Lords at London intended to destroy the King, and desired the King never to forget to revenge it; and required the Young Lords to put the King in Remembrance thereof, with Intent to make Sedition and Discord between the King and his Nobles.

That at divers Times and Places be said, That the Lords of the Council at London intend to Kill me; but if I Die the King shall Die, and if they Famish me they shall Famish him.

25. That of his own Head he removed the King so suddenly from Hampton-Court to Windsor, without any Provision there made, that he was thereby, not only in great Fear, but cast into a dangerous Disease.

26. That by bis Letters be caused the King's People to assemble in great Numbers in Armour, after the Manner of War, to bis Aid and Assistance.

27. That

27. That he caused his Servants and Friends at Hampton-Court and Windsor to be Apparelled in the King's Armour, when the King's Servants and Guard went Unarmed.

is

e i-

at m

ed

be

n,

be

ige

ng

id.

nd

all

ish

ing

or,

pas

ng's

hat

28. That he intended to fly to Jersey und Wales, and laid Post-horses, and Men, and a Boat, to that Purpose.

Tho' there is no Question to be made but that most of these Articles were meerly devised, others enlarg'd or wrested, and otherwife odiously interpreted, yet the Duke, for Quietness Sake, subscrib'd them with his own Hand; not as many Authors make out, for want of Resolution to defend himself, but more certainly because he knew the Strength of his Enemies Faction, who were in Effect all the Council, except One or Two: And likewise tenderly, confidering the Danger the King, his Nephew, wou'd be in if this Broil had proceeded farther; and the Danger of the State of Religion too, to which many on the other Side had no great Favour; it therefore does not feem his Weakness, as these Authors inter, but rather his Caution and Prudence, that made him fubmit as he did: First to the King, of whom he formally crav'd Mercy; and next to many of the Lords of Council, whom he pray'd to intercede for him with the King.

These humble Submissions made a Heavenly Harmony in the Ears of the Duke's Enemies; but they wrought their Effect also in the King's Breast, so that he was forthwith releas'd from the Tower, had his Fines discharg'd, and his Lands and Goods restor'd, except such as had been given given away; either the Malice of his Enemies being somewhat appeared, or their Credit not fufficient to resist. Soon after which he was entertained and feasted by the King with great Shew of Favour, and sworn again of the Privy-Council, and a seeming Amity made between him and the Lords; and to compleat all, a Match made between the Duke's Daughter and Match made between the Duke's Daughter and Match made Lord High Admiral, and soon after paired to the Dignity of Duke of Porthum: beriant.

But these Appearances of a Calm did not last long, for this new Favourite Porthumber: land being now in Honour Inferiour to none, and Superiour in Power and Authority to all the Court, he cou'd not restrain his Ambitious Defigns, which 'tis prefum'd were to acquire the chief Sway to himself, and to be absolute in Command: Bur before he could mount to this Pirch of Grandeur, he found it absolutely necessary to remove Somerfet out of the Way; for he did not like the late Reconciliation, and was conscious how far a little more Time might carry it; for the flood firipp'd of his Offices of Protector, Treasurer, and Marshal, yet he was soon restor'd by the Breath of the King's Mouth. He was therefore first accus'd with a Defign to Murder Northumberland, and other Lords; to which was added Reports, that he had caus'd himself to be proclaim'd King in several Counties; which though they were known to be false, yet they rubb'd upon old Sores, and caus'd a great Ferment among the People: ugal his rance di

cs

ot

as

at

y-

II:

a

If

er

n:

ot

T:

ic.

all

us

re

ite

to

ly

y;

ńd

ne

al,

he

s'd

nd

ts.

n'd

ley

on

the

m

In the Interim, to make his Mischief more fure, he join'd to him the Earl of Arundel, late Lord Charoberlain, and the Earl of Southampton, sometime Lord Chancellor, Men of their own Nature, circumfoed and flow, and at that Time Discountenanc'd, and in Discontent. whom therefore he fingled as fittest for his Purpole. Many lecret Conferences they had at their several Houses, which often lasted the greatest Part of the Night: But at other times they were cautious and referv'd in affenting to his Advice in any weighty Matters propos'd; fo that they feem'd to have abandon'd his Party, which he had Power and Cunning enough to turn to their Ruin; for when he faw he could by no means draw them into his private Interest, he found Means to have them dilcharg'd from Council, and to be confin'd to their Houses, not wanting very plausible Objections against them. And doubles he had Region enough to suspect, that they who had the Honesty not to approve his Ambitious Purpoles, would not want the Heart to oppole them.

The next Acousation against the Duke was, That he had perswaded many of the Nobility to chuse him Protector again at the ensuing Parliament: And Sir Thomas Palmer, a great Creature of Postpuniberland's, also affirm'd, That being upon a Journey with him towards the North, in Case Sir William Herbert; Matter of the Horse, had not assured him he shou'd receive no Harm, he wou'd have rais'd the People, and that he had sent the Lord Grey before to know who wou'd be his Friends: Also, That the Duke of Postpuniberland, the Marquis of Northampton, Northampton, and the Earl of Pembroke, shou'd have been invited to a Banquet; and if they had come slenderly attended, to have been set upon by the Way; if otherwise, then their Heads to be cut off at the Place of Feasting. He likewise farther declar'd, That Sir Ralph Vane had 2000 Men ready; That Sir Thomas Arundel had assur'd the Tower; That Seymour and Hammond wou'd wait on him; and That all the Horse of the Gend'army shou'd be slain.

To which Mr. Secretary Gevil added, that the Duke had sent for him, and said, He suspected some ill Meaning against him; and that he replied. If he were not in Fault he might trust to his Innocence, if he were he had nothing to say, but to lament him.

Being advis d of these Proceedings by some who had Regard to Truth and Honesty, he immediately fent Letters, wherein he openly defy'd the Secretary, and then fent to Sir Thomas Palmer to understand what he had said of him, who denied all he had reported. Yet the Duke, either ignorant of what was intended by all this, or fearing that his open Defence might precipitate his Enemies to proceed in their Defigns, came to Court; but it happening to be a little later than usual, it was interpreted as an Evidence of his Guilt, tho' nothing was farther from it: He was therefore after Dinner suddenly apprehended, and Sir Ralph Vane being twice fent for, fled. The Day fol-· lowing likewise his Dutchess was sent to the Tower, at which very few People griev'd.

Northamation

u'd

nev

fet

eir

ng.

lpb

nas

our nat

be

at af-

at

ust

2y,

ne

he

ly

10-

of.

he

be ce

in

n-

r-

ng

er

16

1-

e

r

- Sir Thomas Palmer being again examin'd, added to what he had faid before, That when the Gend'army had been affaulted, that the Duke defign'd to run thro' the City, and Proclaim Liberty; but in case his Attempt did not succeed, he wou'd go to the Isle of Wight, or to Poole.

Another Evidence was one Crane, a Person who having confum'd his own Effate, was prepar'd for any mischievous Purpose he was put upon. This Man declar'd for the most Part what Palmer had done, but added. That the Lord Paget's House was the Place where the Nobility thou'd have been kill'd at a Banquet: also that the Earl of Arundel had been made acquainted with the Practice by Sir Michael Stanbope; and that it had been put in Practice, had not the Greatness of the Enterprize caus'd Delays, and some Difference about it; he said alfo, That this Duke once pretending himfelf Sick, went to London to try what Friends he cou'd procure. Hammand also said, That the Duke's Lodgings at Greenwich had been strongly watch'd by Night.

All these were sworn before the Council, and the greatest Part of the Nobility of the Realm. that their Confessions were true, and as favourably fet down in Behalf of the Duke, as their Consciences wou'd permit. And immediately, upon the Information of Crane, the Earl of Arundel and the Lord Paget were fent to the Tower, with some of their Domesticks.

tehe Dake of Masthauriberland, or any orace on b'mouseb bas of E 2 to sloot sucWhere-

cont

affat

Nay

Adv

at L

his Cha

in I

it,

Th

ons

Per

abl

Dut

al,

WE

of

Te

tv

th

te

10

n

Whereupon, to give forme publick Satisfaction to the People, the Lord Chancellor declar'd openly in the Star-Chamber all these Accusations against the Duke of Somerses: Letters were also published to all Potentates, Embassadors, and Chief Men in any State, wherein these Matters were comprized. By other Letters, the Muster of the Gend'army was put off for certain Months; other Letters were directed to Six Arthur Darcy to take Charge of the Tower, and to discharge Six Arthur Markham, for that, without acquainting any of the Lords of the Council, he suffer'd the Duke of Somerses to walk Abroad, and permitted Intersourses of Letters between David Seymour, and Mrs. Poines.

And now Marmith, impatient of his long projected Deligns, and distruiting whether the King's Levity, and great Love for his Unkle, might not return to its natural Source, he was haften'd to his Trial, the Charge against him consisting of Five Parts. 1. Of raising Men in the North Parts of England. 2. Of Assembling Men to kill Posthumberland. 3. Of resisting his Attachment. 4. Of killing the Gend'army. And, 5. Of assaulting the Lords, and devising their Deaths.

himself on his Trial of his Peers. He first deny'd that he had any Intent to raise Men in the North, but that upon some Brutes apprehending a Fear, he sent to Sir William Herbert to remain his Friend. He said that he never determin'd to kill the Duke of Porthumberland, or any other Lord; but spoke of it only, and determin'd the contrary.

contrary. Alledging further, That it had been a Mad Enterprize with his 100 Men to have affaulted the Gend'army, confishing of 900: Nay, and suppose he had prevailed, to what Advantage cou'd it any Way have turn'd: Next he faid, That he never projected any Stir at London, but always held it a good Place for his Security: And for having Men in his Chamber at Greenwich, 'twas manifest he had no ill Intent by it; for when he might have done it, he did it not. He likewise objected several Things against the Persons whose Examinations had been taken, especially Palmer, defiring they might be brought to his Face, which to a Person of his Condition was but reasonable: But this was refus'd, and indeed the Reputation of these Evidences was but very llender.

It was strenuously argu'd by the King's Council, That many of the Crimes charg'd upon him were Treason, and the other Felony.

The Lords went together, and first the Duke of Saffolk nobly said. That he did not hold it reasonable, that this being a Contention between private Subjects, that under Pretence thereof any mean Action shou'd be drawn to Intention of Treason. What wick, who among the saft, put on a Sadness of Countenance, spoke of the same Side; but it was not taken to proceed from his Modesty, but that he cou'd not in that Assembly enforce the contrary with Honour. The Marquiss of Narthampson us'd many Contentious Arguments, but never reply'd to any Answer upon him.

CO

Ig

vi

W

T

K

ran

hi

£

K

of

th

So as

66

.

66

66

...

..

(4

66

17

6

4

6

Alledging tother, That it had been held it unfit that either Porthumberland, the Marquiss of Northampton, or the Earl of Pembroke, shou'd be of the Trial, because the Person was chiefly charg'd with Practices intended against them. But hereto Answer was made, That a Peer of the Realm might not be challeng'd. After much Difference in Opinion, the Duke was acquitted of Treason, but by a Majority of Mices of Porthumberland's Faction found Guilty of Felony; nor wou'd this have gone so hard, but that they had politickly protecuted all under Pretence of Treason.

The Duke might certainly have craved the Benefit of his Clergy; (indeed by a Statute of Hen. VII. it is Felony for Inferior Persons to contrive the Death of a Privy Councellor, but Peers are exprelly therein excepted;) but apprehending, as 'tis prefumed, that his Submission would have a good Effect on the Temper of his Enemies, to disarm them of their Spirit of Malice, he fuffered Judgment to pass. As he departed, being acquitted of Treason, the Axof the Tower was not openly carried, whereupon the People imagining he had been acquitted in general, let up fuch Joyful and Repeated Shouts that they were heard beyond Charing Crofs. 'Tis certain the People favoured him the more because they perceived the Secret Malice that was borne him; but this immoderate Favour of the Multitude did him no good, for his Adversaries took the Advantage of turning it to his Prejudice. It was infinuated to the King, That after the Duke's Return to the Tower he acknowledged to certain Lords that he had hired Bartueille to make them away; That Bartueille had confessed OMO

hey

the

m-

er-

led

de.

ial-

the 10-

ion

ve

ro-

the

ot

to

out

re-

ion

his

Made-

of

on

in

uts

ris

be-

725

the

fa-

his

W-

27-

ad

cd

confessed as much, and that Hammond was not Ignorant thereof; which, whether true, or devised to estrange the King from him, was not without its Effects; for having by Masques. Tiltings, and other Divertions, alleviated the King's Mind from him as much as possible. and withal breath'd dangerous Things against him into his Tender Ears, after Two Months Continuance in Prison, and not withstanding the King's Earnest Defire to fave him, the Force of his Enemies Persuations prevailed; and on the 24th of Jan. 1552, he was drawn to the Scaffold on Tower-Hill: where being come, he address d himself to the People; and after some few Words on the Occasion of his Suffering, "He prayed them all to be contented with his "Death, which he was most willing to suffer; and likewise that they would join with him "in Prayer for the Preservation of his Majesty, " to whom he had hitherto approved himself a "Faithful and True Subject, and had always "been most Diligent about his Majesties Af-" fairs both at Home and Abroad; and no less " in feeking the Common Benefit of the Realm. At which Words the People cried out, It is most True, " He wished the King continual "Health and Happiness. To which the People cried again, Amen. "He wished likewise to all his Councellors the Grace and Favour of "God, whereby they might Rule with Juflice; and above all, recommended to them "Obedience to the Sovereign Power under " Pain of Condemnation.

As to his Affairs with private Men, he faid, There were those whom he had offended, whom he defired earnestly to pardon him, as he forgave all those who had any ways offended him. And And now there happened a Kind of Disorder among the People, who were in great Hopes a Pardon had been brought him; but this being appear'd, he defired the People to be Still.

gree

No

of

inv

int

211

m

D

of

ti I

37

1

ut

" For, faid he, I have often look'd Death in the Face upon great Adventures in the Field, " he is now no Stranger to me; and of all the " vain Mockeries of this World, I repent me " of nothing more than effecting Life more " Dear than I ought to have done: I have en-" dured the Hate of Great Persons, so much " the more Dangerous, because Unjust. I have " incurr'd Displeasure from Inferiors, not al-" ways from any great Faults of my own, (al-" tho' I was never free,) but for giving Way " to the Faults of others: And now I nei-" ther fear to Die, nor, defire to Live, " and having maftered all Grief in myfelf, I de-" fire no Man to forrow for me: And then fuffered with admirable Constancy and Presence of Mind, neither by Voice, Geffure, or Countenance, thewing himself any way dejected or moved at the Apprehension of Death.

Faithful, who never harboured any Designs Prejudicial to the King, but always intended his Safety and Honour. The People departed under the most installible Tokens of Grief, dipping Handkerchiefs in his Blood, which they preserv'd as so many Sacred Relicks of the Memory of this Great Man; who was the more pitied and lamented for the known Enmity and Hatred that Ploythumberland had against him, and who fell a Sacrince to the Malice and Enry of his Enemies, contracted morely through the great

Nor did this satisfie only for his Friends, some of them must bear him Company, and others be involved in his Ruin, to make the greater Noise in the Ears of the Reople, and to lead them into more specious Amusements of bis Guilt.

er

es ne

in d,

he ne re

n-

ch

ve

1-

1-

ay i-

,

eni

Ce

n-

or

as

ns

d

)-

y

re

d

1,

ne

ı£

The Sudden Fall of Posthumberland.

of the sudden Fall of Dythumberland, who having, between the Estects of Enmity and Ambition, procur'd Somerfet's Death, to make room for more aspiring and dangerous Designs. Triumph'd over his Ashes only the space of one Year and a few Months, before he met a just Reward of all his Actions.

But outwardly for the present he gain'd a great Hand over the Nobility, who perceiving he was able to endanger the Estate of the Greatoff, and that the more Respect they shew'd him, the more Sasety they liv'd in, and were the more easily advanc'd to Honour, they all submitted to cringe to him, and crowded at his Levee; but very sew, unless his own Creatures, were really in his Interest, or heartily pleas'd at the Measures he took.

And the King at first did not appear openly in any Sadness of Countenance that inight appear disagreeable to Majesty, yet he inwardly grieved for his Unkle, and would often sigh, and let fall Tears: He was of Opinion that he did not deserve Death; or if he had, that it was more owing to his Wife's Proceedings ings than his own, and therefore is faid to have broke out into the following Speeches.

And where then, Said be, where was the " Clemency of a Prince? Where the Good Na-" ture of a Nephew? Ah! how Unfortunate " have I been to those of my own Blood? My " Mother I flew at my Birth, and fince have made away Two of her Brothers, and poffi-" bly to make Way for the Purposes of others " against myself. Was it ever known before " that a King's Unkle, a Lord's Protector, One " whose Fortunes had much advanc'd the Honour " of the Realm, did lose his Head for Felony? "A Felony neither clear in Law, and in " Fact weakly proved : Alas! how falfly have "I been abused? How weakly carried? How " little was I Master of my own Judgment? 66 But both his Death, and the Envy of it, must be charged on me.

And from thenceforward the King began to languish in his Health, as Posthumberland did to rise in Power and Authority, having the chief Sway in ordering all Things as he saw good. And now seeing his Opportunity, he got his Son Guilford Dudley Married to the Lady Jane Grey, eldest Daughter of Henry Duke of Suffolk, by Frances, Daughter to Mary, Second Sister to King Henry VIII. which was one great Step to the Ambitious Designs he had in Hand.

As the King's Sickness daily encreas'd, so did Porthumberland in his Diligence about him, for he was little absent, and had always those about the King to give him Notice how his Health chang'd or continu'd every Hour; and the more joyful he was at the Heart, the more sorrowful

P

h

ir

tì

g

3

n

F.

I

b

n

th

th

V

C

J

E

L

V

ave

the

Na.

nate My

ave

ers

Fore One

y?

in

ave

ow or

it,

did

nief

od.

his

olk,

ot 1

to

hid

for

out

lth

ore

ful

vas

was his Countenance: Whether any Tokens of Poison did appear Reports are various; but his Physicians declar'd that they perceiv'd an invincible Malignity in his Disease; but 3/202: thumberland regarded not the Murmuring of the Multitudes, knowing well that Rumours grow stale, and vanish with Time; yet to diffipate them for the present, he caus'd it to be reported that the King was well recover'd in his Health, which was readily liften'd to, and gave great Satisfaction among the People: But the Certainty of his Danger again reviving, the Populace, upon a Disposition to interpret all Porthumberland's Actions to the work, left nothing unfaid that might convince him of their Hatred; but he was now little mov'd thereat. for being equally obstinate in his Purpose and Defire, he refolv'd to diffemble no longer, but began openly to play his Game, which was next to displace the Lawful Successor, and fet up the Lady Jane Grey aforesaid, who had Married his Son, and had no Right to the Crown, but through what his Ambition on that Account was capable to give her; yet he procurd, or rather constrain'd, the King to appoint her to fucceed him. a drud colling of the

Nor did this want for Opposition, for the Lord Chief Justice Mountague, and the other Judges, told the King, that the Articles shew'd them, according to which they shou'd Frame a Book for the Settlement of the Crown on the Lady Jane, was directly against the Act of Succession, which was an Act of Parliament, and wou'd be taken away by no such Device. But when they were told that it was the King's absolute Will that a Book shou'd be made according to those Articles, they took them, yet F 2

Pow

hop

of

Hal

ed l

1

lar wh

fho

Ot

a fe

wh

Ab

Au

he

he

he

al

21

fi

n

resolv'd to do nothing, but to report to the Lords, that not only the executing this Device was Treason after the King's Death, but the very making of it was immediately Treason. For this Resolution Douthumbersond in the highest Rage call'd Mountague a Traitor, and so he went Home without doing any Thing more at that Time.

Soon after Mountague receiv'd a Second Letter from the Council to come to Court, where he, and some other of the Judges and Lawyers, were brought to the King, who demanding why they had not obey'd his Orders, Mountague told the King the Reason; adding, That if he had done it, it had been of no Effect, but become utterly void on the King's Demise; and that the Statute of Succession cou'd not be taken away but by the same Authority by which it was made, and that was by Parlia-The King faid they shou'd prepare it, and afterwards it shou'd be ratified in Parliament. So that at last, what with the Duke's Anger; and the King's, and other Lords appearing resolutely for it, Mountague at length contented to it, obtaining first a Commission under the Great-Seal for so doing, and afterwards a general Pardon: So he and the reft drew up the Device, and, as he writes, with forrowful and weeping Eyes; and leftly, after he had done it, to shew how little he approv'd of what he had done, he fent his Son to ferve and affift the Lawfut Successor.

It will be needless to repeat the Reasons then given for altering the Succession; yet it passed the Great-Seal, and was subscribed by all the Privy-Council, the greatest Part both of Number and Power

Power of the Nobility of the Realm, the Bighops, the King's Council, and all the Judgest of the Corlinon Law. Except Sir James Hales, who was afterwards un worthily rewards ed by Queen Mary for his Refutal.

e

0

t

t t

It is very probable that the general Inclination of all these proceeded from their particular Interests, being possess of Abby Lands, &c., which they held themselves in Danger of losing, shou'd, a Popish Successor ascend the Throne. Others were drawn in partly by Fear, and not a few through Obligation to Douthumberland, who then grew exceeding Powerful, and almost Absolute in Government; and supposed to be capable to make any Title good, either by his Authority or his Sword.

There was, however, one Thing yet which he thought conductive to his Deligns; that whill the King languithed under a Lingering Sickness he might draw the Lady Mary wholly into his Power: Fo which Purpole he fent Letters to her directed in the King's Name, from the Council, requesting her forthwith to repair to Court to the King, her Brother, to comfort him, and alleviate the Misfortune of his Sickness and to give Orders in Affairs about him; who, suspecting no Danger, put herself on her Journey; but when the came within half a Day's Journey of London the had fecret Novice of the Snare that had been laid for her; and return ing to Hamfdon, the there received the News of her Brother's Death, and of Portumber land's fecret Practices; and judging it unfafe to remain near London, where her Enemies were in full Power, the withdrew from Hunsdon House in Hertfordshire, to Framlingham-Castle in Suffolk, Suffolk, to wait the Issue; in the mean Time the King's Death was conceal'd from the People Two Days, the better to effect Porthumbers land's Purposes: But then was Queen Jane Proclaim'd with all Solemnity and a Letter dispatch'd from the Council to the Lady Mary to fatisfie her therein, and to exhort her to defift from her Title; instead of which she began to gather what Men she could, many of the Lords and Gentry reforting to her.

For this Reason the Lords in Council, under the Influence of Posthumberland, began to raise Forces with all possible Speed, that they might surprize the Lady Mary, and bring her to London by Force. The Duke of Suffolk was defign'd General of these Troops; but those who secretly favour'd the Lady Mary, influenc'd the new Queen to keep her Father near her, and to fend Porthumberland, who, they faid, might do more by the Terror of his Name, having lately reduc'd the Norfolk Rebels, than the other by his Arms and Councel. Befides, who was a properer Guardian to her than her own Father? And as to the City, her Council were at Hand to govern it with their usual Wisdom and Fidelity.

Being mov'd with these Reasons, she prevail'd with Porthumberland to undertake the Charge: the was in a World of Apprehention, lest any Disorder, or unlook'd-for Alteration, should happen in his Absence; but fince he had no plausible Way to excuse himself, he prepared for his March with an Army of 6000 Men, and a Handsome Train of Artillery, &c.

Sty Post.

3

h

21

me

ers

ane

ter

ary

de-

gan

the

ler

to

ey.

ng

lk

ut-

y,

er

d,

he

d

0

n

1,

d

The Preachers whom Porthumberland had appointed in London in great Numbers to oppose Queen Mary's Title, prevail'd but little in the City, much less in the Countrey; for the Common People began to flock to her in great Multitudes; and not the Common Sort only, but many of the best Interest and Quality, took the first Opportunity to join her.

This was a very great Damp to Porthumberland's Designs; but it happen'd yet worse when Sir Edward Hastings, Brother to the Earl of Huntington, who had a Commission from Porthumberland to raise 4000 Foot, went over with them to Queen Mary. Another Accident prov'd likewise of great Advantage to the the Lady Mary's Cause; for Porthumberland having appointed 6 Men of War to Cruise on the Northern Coast, to prevent the Lady Mary's Flying by Sea, these were by Stress of Weather driven into Tarmouth Harbour, and there secured for her Service.

The Lords who were with Lady Jane, as foon as they heard of these Passages, were under dreadful Apprehensions for the Consequence, whilst, on the other Hand, the Lady Mary's Friends at Court were inspir'd with new Vigour; and being grown more Bold and Resolute, began to open their Minds to each other. Posthumberiant had written to the Council to detire more Forces: He had 8000 Foot, and 2000 Horse, when he arriv'd at Cambridge; but by that Time he reach'd St. Edmond's-Bury he found them greatly diminish'd in their Numbers. Many deserted him daily; and he fear'd no less than a general Desection among his Troops, for which Reason he went back to Cambridge, and there ply'd the Council with continual Application for more Forces.

The Lady Many's Party taking their Opportunity, came to a Resolution, That the necessary Forces should be raisid as soon as possible; but concluded. That none except themselves ought to be trusted with the Command, for Fear of the same Dangerous Experiment of Sir Edward Hallings to Porthumberland. And now getting out of the dower, where, in a Manner, they had fat only like Prisoners, these Lords of the Council besides many other of the Nobility, well affected to the Lady Mary, affembled themselves at Baynard-Caftle, the Earl of Pembroke's House, under Pretence of Treating on cother Matters, but in Reality to concert Meafures to dethrone the Lady Jane, and let up the Lawful Successor.

In this Consultation the Earl of Arundel fell severely upon Porthumberland: He ran over the History of the late Times, and accumulated every Act of Mismanagement, Cruelty, Ambition, and Injustice committed in the lare Reign, and throw the Odium of all upon him only; and profest himself amaz'd how he had brought fuch Great and Noble Perfons, meaning those Present, to be Tools to his Preposterous and Wicked Defigns; for twas by their Consent and Affishance that his Daughter in-Law, the Lady Jane, had the Crown put on her Head; the Soveraignty in effect remaining in him to exercise the most unaccountable Rage nand Tyranny over their Lives and Fortunes. To accomplish this Uturpation indeed the Gause of Religion was pretended; but tho they they bad sake that what preci to av prop to the Speed aloud claps be no of be lutic clair done and the what goin all to more vate direct Dec

Ari con ried they had forgot the Aposse's Advice, Not to do Evil that Good may come on it; and to obey even had Princes, not out of Fear, but for Conscience Sake; yet who he ask'd had Reason to believe that Queen Mary intended any Alteration; and what a Madness is it, continues he, for Men to precipitate themselves into certain Destruction to avoid an uncertain Danger? And therefore proposed that the Lady Mary, undoubted Hele to the Crown, might be Proclaim'd.

When the Earl of Arundel had finish'd his Speech, the Earl of Pembroke generously express'd aloud his Approbation of the Proposal; and clapping his Hand on his Sword, added, That he was ready to dispute that Matter at the Peril of his Life with any that durst oppose it.

Upon this they all went into the same Resolution, and Queen Mary was immediately Proclaim'd thro' the City; which was no sooner done, but the Lords sent and seiz'd the Tower, and oblig'd the Duke of Suffolk to appear before the Council, who, upon the first Rumours of what had pass'd, was strangely dejected; and going into his Daughter's Apartment, ordered all the Ceremonies of Royalty to cease, and admonished her to bear with Patience what could not be help'd, to think of returning to a privater State of Life: This done, Suffolk went directly to the Council, and subscribed their Decree.

After general Acclamations on this Account, Arundel and Paget having seen Things well accomplished, took Horse the same Night, and carried the News to the Queen, who received it with great Transports and Joy, the Confirmation of so happy a Revolution. The Council in the mean Time dispatch'd Letters to Post thumberland to inform him of what had pass'd, requiring him to sign, the Decree, and disband his Army: But before he receiv'd these, suspecting a Change, and cunningly disguising his Concern, pusilanimously Proclaim'd Queen Mary at Cambridge; and throwing up his Hat in the Crowd, pretended to express his Joy: Then his Army was disbanded, and all the Nobility of his Party going over to Queen Mary, obtain'd Pardon, by throwing the whole Guilt upon Posthumberland.

tio

The Lady Jane was seiz'd, and her Attendants remanded to their respective Homes; Posthumberland too, by Order of the Queen, was seiz'd by the Earl of Arundel, and sent Prisoner to the Tower, together with Sir Andrew Dudley, his Brother, and others of the Party: The Lawful Successor was set on the Throne. Posthumberland, for his Subtle and Pernicious Praétices, lest his Ambitious Head, (People upbraiding him with the Blood and Ruin of Somerset and his Friends,) and the Nation made sensible bow great a Tyrant and Monster in the State they bad cares d.

m

all

relali

VO ma

Co

Sca

Al

lat

Sta

th

Par Boy Co

the

est I sufficies a copy the Contract-

Sandy to be shown the Acondant.

BOOKS Printed for J. Baker, at the Black-Boy in Pater-Noster-Row.

ind i

at

is

d

ŧ

C

e

d

Rife and Difgrace: With the sudden Promotion of Novicius. In which are intermix'd all the Intrigues, both Amorous and Political, relating to those Memorable Adventures; as also the Characters of the Old and New Favourites of both Sexes in the Court of Britomartia. Collected from the Memoirs of a Courtier lately Deceas'd. The Second Edition. Price 6 d.

A Justification of the Dutch from several late Scandalous Resections: In which is shewn the Absolute Necessity of Preserving a Strict Inviolable Friendship betwixt Great-Britain and the States-General: With the Fatal Consequences that must attend a War with Holland. Price 6 d.

The History of the Dutch Usurpations, their Maxims and Politicks in Point of Government, and their remarkable Ingratitude to England. Particularly their unheard-of Cruelties at Amboyna, and the Debates thereon in the English Council in the Reign of King James I. with their usual Method of managing Treaties. Price Six-pence.

Books Printed for J. Baker.

A Collection of all the Addresses, &c. of the Lords and Commons to the Queen since Her Happy Accession to the Throne. Price is.

A Collection of all the Speeches, &c. of His Late Majesty King William III. of Ever-glorious Memory; to which is added, the English Declaration of Rights. Price 6d.

The History of Treaties: Containing all those that have been concluded from the Peace of Manfer inclusive to this Time; the leveral Infringments or Incroachments alledg'd on all Sides, particularly urg'd against France, and the Pretentions which have been the Occasion of Breaches. The Memorable Actions and Events of the Wars that have enfued from Time to Time. The whole being a Series of the most Genal Occurrences, either Martial or Civil, for shove Sixty Years, throughout all Christendom. Of fingular the for the Understanding of the Nature of Treaties, the Grounds on which the Prefent Negociations are carried on, and the Contests now on Foot between the opposite Parties.

An Enquiry into the Danger and Confequenof a War with the Dutch. Price 6 d.

Memoirs of the Chevalier de St. George: With some Private Passages of the Life of the late King James II. Never before Publish d. Price 1.1. 20 MA 50

Rectinguity their amount-of Canelties or dis-

in Park To No Pass Columb

